

Invitation to academic directors of European master's programmes to join

MASTERMIND Europe Focus Groups

Background

Various developments – including Globalisation and Bologna – have led to a huge diversity in both bachelor's and master's programmes in Europe. Increasingly, students seek their master's in a new place. Efforts to harmonize outcomes of bachelor's degrees – whether in subject content or competencies – do not come close to bringing automatic recognition. Instead, a conceptual framework (for comparable descriptors for master's admissions) and a toolkit (to define master's admission requirements) may help to create the diverse international classrooms that many programmes seek.

The “Mastermind Europe” project is developing and testing a toolkit for master's directors who want to change their admission of applicants from outside their own institutions: From a process of recognition of diplomas – as comparable with the preceding bachelor's from their own universities – to a process of assessment of the required competencies. Competencies in terms of the knowledge, skills and other characteristics, which they think relevant for their master's programmes.

Specific tools will help master's programmes to define:

- which substance-related knowledge and skills are required at entrance,
- which generic academic levels of competence are required,
- which additional personal and interpersonal characteristics are needed,
- which additional criteria, such as language requirements and group requirements, are at play, and
- which testing mechanisms are available to be used in and/or adapted to the context of specific programmes.

Participants will receive draft versions of the tools in preparation for the Focus Group meetings.

Focus Group Meetings

The above tools will be tested in Focus Group meetings in different European cities (for the current list of Focus Group meetings please consult the timeline at the Mastermind website: <http://mastermindingeurope.eu/>). The meetings are intended for academic directors of master's programmes who can expect to gain knowledge and ideas that will help them to design and implement improved master's admission for their own programmes. The Focus Group meetings will last one evening-plus-day: from 6 pm till 6 pm. The meetings will be coordinated and facilitated by Kees Kouwenaar & Inez Meurs from the general project team, together with a facilitator from the host institution.

The overall objectives of the Focus Group meetings are:

- a. To test the format of an intensive workshop: does it help master's coordinators to reshape their admission? Participants will have concrete and valuable take-home outcomes of the workshop, notwithstanding the testing character of the event.
- b. To provide input for the development of the tools and reports, to tailor these to the needs of the wider target group of master's coordinators and directors.
- c. To help the participants to reshape the admission practices of their own programmes.

The meeting will offer expertise and allow for in-depth discussion in various settings on

- a) the rationale for the shift from diploma-recognition to competency-assessment,
- b) the different categories of admission criteria: substance related knowledge and skills, academic competencies, personal characteristics,
- c) stakeholder engagement, and
- d) nuts and bolts of tests, admission procedures and regulatory issues.

How to get involved?

If you are interested in joining the Focus Group meeting in Barcelona (21 and 22 April 2016) send an expression of interest by March 20 to nadja@acup.cat.

As the mastermind Europe project is supported through the ERASMUS+ programme, we can subsidize participants who have to travel and stay overnight (max. € 450 altogether).

Focus Group Facilitators
