

Biography: Andrew Scott

Andrew Scott is Director for Employability, Skills and Lifelong Learning in the Scottish Government. He has responsibility for public policy on matters including employability, skills, vocational training, further education, higher education and learner support. He has previously worked in Scotland and Whitehall, across an extensive range of departments and public policy issues, including employment, environment, housing, and on the development of strategic approaches to Government policy.